Supplementary information

Supplementary Figure MR images of subject 4 from the reproducibility study at the location of the two black arrows of Figure 5. At the same location two small irregularities can be seen in the MR images (white arrows), which shift the location of the maximal image gradient, used to define the boundary between vitreous body and retina. This results in an apparently higher retinal distance.