Figure S12. Schematic of the human and rat eyes, reproduced based on MRI images.\textsuperscript{50,51} Compared to sclera buckle placement in a human eye (A, thick black line), the location of the circumlimbal suture in a rat eye (B) is closer to the trabecular meshwork and drainage veins, therefore more likely to impede aqueous outflow. Note the different scales in the two panels.